A revolution in equities

ABSTRACT: Though dealing costs will probably fall, analysts also predict that the new arrival of Tradepoint Investment Exchange will sap London Stock Exchange (LSE) revenues, undermine its quote-driven system, blunt the competitiveness of market makers and lead to the fragmentation of Britain's L1.3 trillion stock...

TEXT: The September launch of Tradepoint Investment Exchange is giving the London Stock Exchange its first real taste of domestic competition since it established more than 200 years ago.

Though dealing costs will probably fall, analysts also predict that...

...driver system calls for market makers -- firms that provide liquidity to the market by committing their capital to buying and selling shares under all market conditions -- to display their bid and offer prices on Stock Exchange Automated Quotations, the exchange's electronic bulletin board. Interested investors then telephone market makers to negotiate details and strike a bargain. Large deals are not published for 90 minutes (within 60 minutes starting in January...

... spread for the most-liquid shares is 1.44 percent of the purchase price in London, compared with 0.32 percent on the New York Stock Exchange and 0.30 percent on the Paris bourse.

Its the prospect of finer pricing that has encouraged a large number of institutional investors -- they include...

... that the quote-driven system does not do), it will spur the development of the sluggish singe-equity options market on the London International Financial Futures and Options Exchange.

Tradepoint could turn out to be a damp squib, of course, just as the Ariel system that was also meant to break the LSE's...

... which most analysts say has served the City well. LSE chief executive Michael Lawrence is quick to point out that its system ensures that the stock of listed companies can be traded under all market conditions. The LSE was the only major international exchange to trade through the crash of October 1987.

Defenders of the quote-driver system also argue that...
